REPORT NO. [REDACTED]

The most serious opposition encountered by the Communist Party of Colombia (PCG) in its campaign to win the support of farm workers is presented by local priests, who openly oppose the Confederacion de Trabajadores de Colombia (Colombian Workers' Confederation—CTC) as being Communist-dominated and support the Union de Trabajadores Colombianos (Union of Colombian Workers—UTC). The PCG decision to agitate among rural workers was based on the fact that the largest proportion of the Colombian population could be found in this category, that these people are considered to be those most easily influenced, and that the Party has encountered opposition in its attempts to agitate among organized workers, many of whom support the Communist Labor Party (PCO).
